

United Nations Climate Change Conference – Cancun

Climate Change 2010

PUBLISHING DATE:
December 6, 2010

SPACE CLOSING:
October 29, 2010

MATERIAL DEADLINE:
December 1, 2010

A slow rate of progress at the international negotiation level is putting an onus on committed countries – and companies – to take action on climate change now.

This special report – produced in co-operation with the Pembina Institute – will examine the world-wide response to climate change and Canada's role in it.

Among its topics, this report will discuss:

Canada in the world. From civic and provincial governments to the the federal government, new Canadian policies are taking shape. How do Canada's climate policies stack up globally?

Corporate response. What actions are leading companies taking today to mitigate their CO<sub>2</sub> emissions and prosper through climate action?

Technology and innovation. From electric cars to carbon capture systems and more, solutions are available today to help mitigate emissions. What are the latest technologies and ready solutions?

The science of climate change. This year, the global temperature reached its warmest on record. As the climate changes more quickly than projected, scientists are becoming more outspoken. What are their latest findings and concerns?

North America. The fate of climate legislation now being debated in the U.S. Congress will have a significant impact on how a Canada-U.S. position evolves. What does it mean for Canada?

Cancun 2010. From Nov. 29 to Dec. 10 leaders will gather in Cancun, Mexico, to continue negotiations advanced last year in Copenhagen. What are the latest developments?

All this and more in this special report.
